University Libraries are Ideological and Moral Cultivating Centers of University Students

University students are generally regarded as a group with high academic level, but they're often ignored as a noble minded group. However, there are some individual exceptional cases; for example: the library seats holding, books stealing, vandalism, book damage and impolite behavior against the management personnel. For such uncivilized behaviors, the library management personnel should shoulder the responsibility of teachers, to criticize and educate such students, and guide them to the correct orientation. It is not only the teacher's responsibility but also the common responsibility of the whole society to cultivate the university students with higher knowledge and noble ideology and morality. University students with high knowledge and low quality are not the talents required by the country, nor can they be the backbone of the country.

The university libraries are the direct windows of the campus culture construction, and they also have direct influence on the students. In the university libraries, the library management personnel have direct contact with the students. Therefore, as management personnel of libraries, they should have high sense of responsibility and sense of mission, give full play to their own advantages, and improve their own cultural and moral qualities. In the process of providing services to each student, they should improve their own rich cultural knowledge and noble professional quality to bring a subtle influence to the students, and guide the students to study hard in the right direction.
